So it was with some trepidation that I began to reread The Lives of a Cell, the first book length compilation of Thomas's columns, after a gap of 30 years. I needn't have worried. The writing is still graceful, the perspective is intelligent, and the themes are, if anything, more relevant now than when they were written: the interdependence ...

Lives of a Cell is the book that jumpstarted my interest in biology over twenty years ago. "Viewed from the distance of the moon, the astonishing thing about the earth, catching the breath, is that it is alive." - so begins the essay "The World's Biggest Membrane", in which he likens the earth with its atmosphere to a cell with its membrane.
